

Dear reader!

This is the new issue of the Electronic Journal of the Faculty of Economics of Lomonosov Moscow State University.

This issue presents the results of young authors research on the modern western economic theories history conducted under the guidance of leading professor of the Faculty of Economics, Lomonosov Moscow State University; reveals the role of education in shaping the green behavior of the population, discusses the situation and development prospects of tourism in Uzbekistan, and provides an overview of the plenary session of the International Scientific Conference “Russia’s Way to Russia: Conceptual Search and Economic Strategy”, held on December 6—8, 2017 at the Faculty of Economics of the Lomonosov Moscow State University.

“New Studies on Modern Economic Theory of the West” article, which consists of four independent sections and a special introduction, presents an analysis of the development of microeconometrics (J. Heckman), the newest forms of behavioral (A. Diton) and experimental (J. List) economic theory, as well as the theory of "incomplete contract" (O. Hart).

The article “The Impact of Education on Green Behavior” addresses the question on the role of education as a factor that can have a significant impact on green behavior, involving more efficient use of natural resources, processing of materials and green consumerism. Using the method of factor analysis, the authors show that education can have a positive impact on the efficiency of waste disposal. At the same time, the obtained results are not sufficiently sustainable for various specifications and samples, and require further research.

The article "Prospects for the development of tourism potential of Uzbekistan" identifies main reasons that impede the acceleration of development of tourism and the effective use of tourism potential in the Republic of Uzbekistan, and formulates proposals that can be used to determine the goals and objectives of state tourism policy.

The final article of this issue presents an overview of the plenary session of the International Scientific Conference “Russia’s way to Russia: Conceptual Search and Economic Strategy”. Economists, sociologists, philosophers and historians discussed current socio-economic and political situation in Russia. The discussion was wrapped up by the proposal of possible ways of establishing a competitive economy and strengthening the country's sovereignty.

We are looking forward to your feedback on the articles published in this issue and welcome possible future cooperation.
